Like a number of similar organizations, it is, the product of a philosophy and a method of studying school children that are relatively new in America, that are not founded on tradition, and that have no counterpart outside this country. In the early history of examinations, attempts at the measurement of the ability and achievement of students were sporadic and unorganized. Up to the second decade of the present century, measurement was almost entirely an institutional affair and it has remained just that for the great majority of schools and colleges almost to the present time. Examinations have traditionally been made by classroom teachers who have had neither training for nor special interest in this aspect of their work. Except for such advanced thinkers as Horace Mann, the idea that there could be a theory and technique of measurement apart from...
