It is one of the most popular books. I am quite late in starting to read this one, but better than never. Once you begin to read the book, it is extremely difficult to leave it before concluding.

The agreement between plaintiff and defendant was, that defendant would ship the cotton on a platform car, and Mullen was to throw a tarpaulin over the cotton, and go along, with buckets of water, to put out fires. Defendant proceeded to carry out its portion of the agreement, but Mullen, the agent of plaintiff, failed to carry out his; and plaintiff insists. that, because of his failure, defendant was bound to abandon the contract; or, at any rate, must give notice to plaintiff before proceeding to carry it out. We are not aware of any legal principle which requires any such thing. It was the duty of the parties, respectively, to perform their several obligations, at the proper time. Railroads have their schedule times for running their trains, and it is the duty of persons having business to be transacted by them, to be on hand at the proper time. The road was not bound to await the plaintiff's convenience, in the absence of contract, but was authorized to proceed to carry the cotton, if it saw proper to do so. It is true, the road might have declined to take the cotton at all, upon plaintiff's failure to comply with the part of his agreement, but was not bound to do so. The defendant saw proper, in the absence of the agent of plaintiff, and without the agreed precautions against fire, to undertake to carry the cotton; and the question here is, did...
